SHaring Electronic Resources and Laws On Crime

Issue I, December 2014

Latest developments

Fraudulent Medicine is a new SHERLOC crime type. As a result, nearly 450 legislative provisions recently have been added for 78 Member States. These provisions stem from both criminal and pharmaceutical laws. Compare, for example, the Penal Code of Bangladesh (which criminalizes the 'adulteration of drugs' and sale thereof) with the Sierra Leone's Pharmacy and Drugs Act (which sanctions unauthorized manufacture, transport, trade and sale of medicines – including when carried out by legal persons).

The new Fraudulent Medicine crime type in the Case Law Database is ready to expand. See, for example, R. v. Gillespie and ors (Operation Singapore) – a case that was discussed by its investigator and prosecutor at a UNODC-hosted side event to the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime in October 2014.

Latest developments

Smuggling of Migrants:

The recently uploaded Anti-People Smuggling and Other Measures Act 2010 of Australia amends the Migration Act of 1958. To see how section 233A [offence of people smuggling] is applied by Australian courts, have a look at DPP v Henok (2012) VCC 1432 (19 September 2012).

Wildlife crime:

Have a look at the recently uploaded Law of the People's Republic of China on the Protection of Wildlife.

Section 35 of this law was violated in The People's Procuratorate of Jiangmen City, Guangdong Province v Ng Soo Heong and others, whereby the defendants sought to smuggle pangolins into China. The defendants were charged and sentenced with smuggling rare animals under Chinese Criminal Law.
